EDITO

As the festivities of the 10th anniversary of the ANIMA network have just ended, we would like to warmly thank all the partners and friends who have accompanied us throughout the last decade. We publish two reports on this occasion, which review 10 years of economic cooperation and 10 years of investment promotion in the Mediterranean region. We need to give our greetings to the dynamics of our network and the resilience of the Mediterranean countries in a rather heckled context, even if the challenges remain immense.

Manifestations of withdrawal, which have been multiplying for several months, are contrary to the growing interdependence of economies in the world and to the consciousness of our youth, which is also increasingly global. But innovative responses are expected, locally, which will necessarily irrigate globally.

Mediterranean countries have the opportunity to propose a new vision, in line with the stakes and aspirations that drive our societies today, based on sustainable development, social performance and innovation, to create value locally. The COP22 which has just ended in Morocco is showing the way. Cooperation between countries, and between public and private actors, will be essential to identify and experiment more effective and inclusive ways, and ANIMA will continue to support the Mediterranean on this pathway in the years to come.

Emmanuel Noutary, General Delegate
