EDITO

ANIMA would like to express its deep support to our friends in Egypt, France, Greece and Tunisia who are living painful moments.

After consulting its networks and partners, ANIMA has replied to the request of the European Commission to contribute to the review of the neighborhood policy (read the Contribution of the MedAlliance network in French). The private sector and civil society are showing a renewed interest to be active in this policy, despite their feeling of being progressively excluded from its implementation. Existing bodies able to trace the needs are deemed to have little influence on the programming of the European Commission. The inertia of the decision and programming processes leaves little room for propositions, while the administrative burden of the projects limit their efficiency and seems to exclude potential operators. Our partners also encourage the Commission to better capitalise on the existing, for a consistent and structuring intervention. Finally, the opening of the neighborhood to the "neighbors of the neighbors" (Gulf, Africa, Turkey, Balkans) is highly recommended to avoid an isolation of the Mediterranean region.
